

ABSTRACT

The present invention relates to a substantially aseptic method of preparing meals using automated means whereby food portions of different types each contained within a mould are placed into at least one oven; the food portions are then cooked in the oven; and automated means are used to remove the food from the oven and moulds, and assembling the individual food portions to form a meal within the package using automated means.